

Post Microneedling

Most patients report that Microneedling feels like a mild sunburn the day after the treatment. Immediately after the procedure, you may experience a small amount of pinpoint bleeding and redness in the treatment area. This is expected, and temporary. The bleeding will stop before the end of your visit while the mild redness will subside within a day or two. Below is some other post procedure information:

- For the first 48 hours do not put anything on your face, including makeup, other than what was provided to you at your appointment
- Avoid exercising and excessive sun exposure for 72 hours post procedure
- Avoid applying products that contain acids for one week post procedure
- Avoid other facial treatments such as laser for a month following microneedling